

Protecting public health

The Health Protection Service, plays a vital role in protecting the population from infections and environmental hazards. This is done through:

- surveillance and monitoring of diseases and public health risks,
- operational support and advice for health professionals,
- education, training and research to improve health protection strategies.

Who delivers the service?

The Health Protection Service is provided by a multi-disciplinary team, including:

- doctors and nurses,
- scientists and surveillance specialists,
- Emergency planners,
- administrative staff.

These experts work together to detect, manage, and prevent health threats in Northern Ireland.

Health protection duty room

Location: Public Health Agency, Linenhall Street, Belfast.

The health protection duty room is the first point of contact for health professionals and agencies dealing with health protection incidents or queries during working hours.

- The consultant led health protection teams focus on key public health areas, responding to emerging threats.
- Surge capacity for major incidents is supported by staff across the PHA.

For urgent health protection concern, please contact the Health Protection Service.

Latest News

Campaign to increase cancer awareness through pharmacies rolled out
Bowel Cancer Awareness Month – be aware of symptoms and take part in screening if eligible

Don't miss the opportunity to help protect yourself against shingles
AAA screening event reminds men to attend for potentially life-saving test
TB still on the increase in Northern Ireland

Latest publications

COVID-19 vaccine - A guide to the spring 2025 COVID-19 vaccination programme
C.difficile and S.aureus surveillance quarterly reports 2022-2024
Splenectomy patient leaflet
Splenectomy wallet card
Whooping Cough \(Pertussis\) immunisation - Leaflet
Print